Summer's almost over, and the New York art world returns with a vengeance early next month. To whet your appetite, we present a necessarily incomplete list of a few of the exhibitions we're most excited about as the fall kicks off — from porn-inflected conceptualism to Satanic ceramics.

Strauss Borque-LaFrance at Rachel Uffner (170 Suffolk Street)

September 7-October 19

The artist makes his debut with Uffner, transforming the bi-level space with two- and three-dimensional works and aiming for “a peculiarly disjointed domestic mise-en-scene.”

Included will be a series of what he dubs “Vacation” paintings, hazy and hypnotic works incorporating Plexiglas, plastic mesh, and spraypaint that conjure an aesthetic “somewhere between smartphone screens and store vitrines.”
