Cool Art For Kid's Rooms: You Know You Want It

Face it--it can be a challenge finding stuff to hang on your kids' walls that doesn't offend your adult design sensibility. Sorry, but cloying pastels and cutesy-wootsy woodland creatures--unless rendered by the unparalleled Charley Harper--just have no place in my modern, minimalist apartment. And while some of the big children's stores now offer options that at least won't have you shielding your eyes in horror, I'm not so into my son's wall having the same mass-produced fire truck picture or map of the U.S.A. that five of his friends have. Lucky for me, I stumbled upon littlecollector.com last week--my new favorite source for kid-friendly, parent-approved contemporary art (ranging from roughly $40, unframed, to $375, framed). The site brings you limited-edition prints by big deal illustrators, photographers and artists with the goal of making "collectors for life." No promises that littlecollector.com will turn your kid into the next Charles Saatchi, but hey, it's a start. Here is some of the coolest stuff available on the site right now.
