

The New York Observer, otoño de 2010

performance & visual arts with hundreds of independent bands playing across dozens of venues throughout Manhattan and Brooklyn. Participants can purchase a badge that allows access to all of the events (first come, first served). The festival also has film screenings and panels on the music industry and the arts. This year, CMJ launches CMJ Play, which focuses on music and video games, in collaboration with the Music Video Game Research Project at New York University's Steinhardt school. (www.cmj.com/marathon)

Big Bambú: You Can't, You Don't, and You Won't Stop: Until October 31

The Metropolitan Museum of Art's rooftop garden has been the home of a 50-foot high installation. By using poles and ropes, Doug and Mike Starn have created a impressive structure of organic and man-made materials. Guided tours throughout the week are available. (212-535-7710, www.metmuseum.com)

BAM Next Wave Festival 2010: September 21 - December 19

Brooklyn Academy of Music hosts its annual Next Wave program, featuring a mix of music, theater, talks, performances and art. The art exhibit runs the entire length of the series and is curated by Dan Cameron, with an opening reception on September 21. Artist talks include members of Ridge Theater, members of the Ballet Preljocaj and Ping Chong, who brought the film Throne of Blood to the theater. (www.bam.org)

Brooklyn Academy of Music, home of the Next Wave Festival
JEFFREY BARRELLER